

“Proof of Concept” Green-Lights Global Deployment of New Internal Solution for Banking Services Provider

Client

The client is a leading provider of banking systems and payment technologies with $1.6 billion in revenue.

Executive Summary

The client retained The Revere Group to perform a “Proof of Concept” intended to assess the ability of the Microsoft Office Project Server suite to conform to 20 key requirements.

Prior to Revere’s contribution, the client identified their requirements and usage context. After several discussions, Revere articulated a small project that first completed the installation of the necessary software and then set about configuring the software solution to properly illustrate its conformance to requirements.

Business Challenge

Like many large IT organizations, the client sought to use an enterprise approach to program and project management that ties together disparate sources of interdependent data into a more cohesive whole for management action and reporting. The solution is a mature class of enterprise project products that are carefully configured to underwrite complex processes, support an enterprise approach to resource management, and to consolidate reporting.

Solution

Revere quickly diagnosed the requirements at hand, and mapped them to arrive at a designated series of configuration settings. Once those settings were completed, the requirements were “tested” to assure they worked as intended and a “reference guide” showing how the solution handled each requirement was developed. Finally, a cross-section of the actual community who would use the solution was assembled and tested the solution to determine if it met requirements.

Results

The users who had exposure to the “Proof of Concept” were pleased with its capabilities and the view it provided of functionality it could bring to them. The client asked Revere to provide a completely turnkey solution to them to host, train and support the solution as it undergoes global deployment to over 4,200 staff members.
